Write It. Don't Send It Yet.

You're angry and the reply is already open.

It doesn't have to win a civility award.

Come back later and see what is still true.

You don't need that part. Maybe the angry section is the problem.

Give an apology, don't hide from it. If the protest is about you, say so.

You're allowed to end up with a calmer response.

Sometimes the whole response is, "I need more time."

Say tomorrow, show up tomorrow. Some people are just slow.

Protecting now, deal with that now; the other part is a separate issue.

And don't throw the first version away either. It's a record.

Once more. What was the writer of that response thinking?

Protection, reassurance, help? The police are not your friend.

Who had to write the ugly one.
